Subject: RE: Milwaukee JS asking for a statement on the Wisconsin env. groups' petition

While there has been a lot of email traffic on this topic the actual petition was sent today apparently. At this point we are literally reviewing their petition so we don't have anything else to say at this point. Use of 1431 is typically done in the enforcement context so anything we may decide to do would limit our ability to discuss very broadly. We'll get back to you with an update once we've reviewed the petition.

Tinka -- We have seen a lot of e-mail traffic on this over the past several months. Is there anything that we want to say beyond we are reviewing the petition?

Hi Phillippa,

I am writing a story this morning where environmental groups are asking the EPA to intercede in Kewaunee County, where they complain dairy farmers are polluting the ground water.

I would like to get a comment from the EPA on whether it will look into the situation, or perhaps has already begun to investigate. Locals tells me EPA folks have been up there looking around.

Here is the top to the story:

Six environmental groups on Wednesday asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to exercise emergency powers under the Safe Drinking Water Act to investigate groundwater contamination in cattle-intensive Kewaunee County in northeastern Wisconsin.

In its petition to the federal agency, the groups say that the Department of Natural Resources has failed to protect drinking water for county residents on two fronts: Through its powers to regulate groundwater and the agency's oversight of large-scale cattle operations.

Here is the link to the groups' docs:

Thanks

Lee
